

and Common Tern.

A tremendous thanks must also go to Steven D. Bailey for his helpful research of the literature on tern hybridization and for reviewing a draft of this article.

Finally, I would like to thank the Great Lakes Naval Training Center, Illinois Department of Natural Resources biologist Brad Semel, Bird Conservation Network's Donald Dann and the Navy's biologist Bob VanBendegom for providing the "electric-wired, fenced-off" nesting island within the marina for terns and potential Piping Plovers. If not for the creation of this maritime habitat, the attempted breeding of Arctic and Common Terns might not have occurred.
